It can readily be seen that if the farmer had no knowledge of the information desired, he would, in many instances, promptly or with any degree of accuracy. It is to be hoped that the farmers will pay particular attention to this matter and read the literature sent out by the Government carefully. It will greatly lessen the work of the enumerator and the result will be a quicker and an accurate census. It should also be remembered that all information given to enumerators is in the strictest confidence, and there should be no hesitancy on the part of anyone to answer fully all questions. Some of the questions may seem entirely personal but such is not the case and the complete answer to every question is needed by the Census Department in order to gather the necessary statistics. The toy had been presented to Master Cooper by a relative as a birthday present. It was with considerable boyish glee that, when the time arrived for the flight of the balloon, the happy youngster lighted it and sent it on its journey toward the sky. The balloon arose to a height of possibly two hundred feet and was then blown by the wind directly North. It was 'ust after the flight of the toy that Mr. Uriah Dickerson noticed the bright light. He gazed with open mouthed wonder at the spectacle and called the attention of several neighbors to the unusual sight. He then hurried down town, it is said, where he was the hero of the hour because of the sight he had seen. He commented freely upon the huge frame of the machine which he could distinguish even in the the darkness. One weman who witnessed the flight is said to have remarked that the big aeroplane was so close to the ground that she could distinctly hear the working of the

Nat C. Goodwin, the actor, said the other day that he had been prompted to write his "Matrimony Memoirs" by a similar book written by Samuel Adams, who lived in the time of Garrick, Goldsmith and Dr. Johnson. He denies, however, that his book is to be devoted strictly to his various wives. He said:

He has written interestingly of the charms of Eliza Weathersbee, who became his first wife in 1877.

"She was one of the most beautiful women I ever knew." is one passage. "and one of the most self sacrificing wives that ever blessed a man with her devotion and love. Now she is at Woodlawn, and the daisles grow over her grave.

He writes: "Poor thing! She abandoned the glitter and glare of the world of fashion to seek refuge in the bosom of Bohemia. She extracted herself from

This property is improved by a large new beautiful dwelling well located and very valuable.

Terms of saie: Cash on day of sale. Title papers at the expense of the purchaser. When complimented upon his pretty home on the seashore and upon the ideal life resulting therefrom, Mr. Goodwin said: "I have always been long in the market on homes and wives. I believe no home is complete without a wife, provided she is the kind that will enjoy the company of intelligent, honest and clever people. Some men lease their mates for a cortain time and prate upon their respectability, but I could not fancy a home with a mate whose presence there would preclude the visits of my mother. I think this is the philosophy of life. Nothing can be destroyed until it is built. The true philosophy of life is to achieve something and then for-for Miss Marjorle Gould, who will marry A. J. Drevel, Jr., on April 11 in New York. Probably Miss Gould was as much surprised as the school to learn this, for the commission was originally given to a caterer.

Miss Gould declared that she wanted a reproduction of Georgian Court, the Gould home at Lakeweod, represented in the icing. Apparently that was somewhat beyond the caterer, who simmediately sought the school, and the commission was turned over to one of the young women there.

Two designs of Georgian Court were made and sent in. Soon that personage returned with the news that Miss Gould had changed her mind and mammoth cake. After further conarch. At the bottom was to be Lyndhurst, and above that, on two shelves, as it were, Georgian Court, and then a temple of love for the top.

President Taft's advocacy of economy in public expenditures has struck a responsive chord in an individual signing himself. "A $500 Clerk," who claims to have saved the government sundry small amounts during the last year by the careful use of ink and lead pencils. Wants Schools to Teach Baseball. That baseball should be an important part of the education of children and that every schoolboy and perhaps every schoolgirl should play the game is the opinion of William A. Stecher, director of physical training in the public schools of Philadelphia. He expressed it the other day in the con-ference on hygiene of the National Education association, held in Indianapolis. Each school, he thinks, should have a baseball club, and the clubs should visit each other's grounds in the fashion of the professional leagues.

Such methods as this would make the operations of the Stand ard Oil Company as transparent as a child-blown soap bubble and cause the barons of the beef trust ception, can be compelled to put to turn purple with envy .

The proposition to the County Commissioners was, summed-up, as follows: That the county build two draw-bridges, one at Camden avenue and the other to replace the present structure at the Humphreys mill-dam at the expense of the county, or that the Realty Company would build the bridges at its expense provided the commissioners would exempt the company from any increase in the assessed valuation of the property to be developed for a as a two verse addition to America: period of twenty-five years. Both of these proposals failed to meet with the approval of the commissioners. The company then prepared a copy of the propositions and submitted them to the consideration of the Mayor and Council. This body, too, proved to be unfavorable.

It was after this intimation had been heralded that the gigantic scheme of the development com pany was launched. In order to carry out their plan the officials of the company now propose to suggests these: institute a campaign by which, it is said they would absolutely control the Mayor and Council and put through an action to further their own interests regardless of the attitude of the tax-payers generally. Let it be said now and for all time that if this is the attitude of the Salisbury Realty Company toward the people of this city and county the next municipal primaries will result only in the nomination of either the present members of the council or other men who are in no way interested in the development of the property recently purchased from

This time the department was in no way at fault and the fire fighting apparatus and the volunteer firemen were at work in record breaking time after the alarm had been given. Between the time that the fire was first noticed, however, and the time the alarm was finally sounded, the flames had completely enveloped the buildings beyond any hope of being extinguished. The flames were first noticed at

Two Convincing Reasons. Lord Peterborough, who lived in the reign of Queen Anne, was very frolkme, and one day, seeing from his carriage a dancing master with pear lored stockings lightly stepping over the broad stones and picking his way in extremely dirty weather, be alight ed and ran after him with drawn sword in order to drive him into the mud, but into which he of course followed himself. This nobleman was once taken for the Duke of Marlborg ough and was mobbed in consequence. The duke was then in disgrace with the people, and Lord Peterborough was about to be roughly handled Turning to them, he said:

Patroness of Music.

The origin of music is lost in an tiquity. Among civilized people it is probably to be traced to the ancient Egyptian priests, who employed this art in their religious rites and cere iles. From the Egyptians the Greeks and the Romans derived their knowledge of music. The ancient He rews probably took with them into Palestine some of the songs they had carned in Egypt. The hymns used in the temple formed the basis of the melodies of the early Christian church, and from these hymns was formulated the first authoritative musical system. St. Cecelia is termed the patroness of music.—Exchange.

The origin of the people known as gypsies remains largely a mystery Egypt. India. They first appeared in Europe about 1400 and from the Danube region spread all over the continent, appearing in England about 1520.

Experiments May Produce Remarkable Anodyne.

Distillate, Produced at Rockefeller Institute In New York, Drunk, Not Inhaled, Sent the Animal Painlessly to Sleep-No Nausea.

In the hope of discovering a new anaesthetic, barmless, prompt and without after effects, a chemist of the Rockefeller institute in New York city is daily experimenting with the mysteries of "sleeny grass," as it is known on the high plateaus of the west, or Stipa vaseyi, as it is known to science A distillation of eleepy grass while given to a rabbit sent the little animal painlessly to sleep, and when it awoka it was as brisk as if roused from a refreshing slumber. Its heart action had remained normal throughout. There was no nausea or other after

Results Not Far Off.

Sleepy grass therefore promises, in the opinion of the chemist who is experimenting with it, to produce an anodyne which will not be inhaled but will be drunk without any of those painful struggles against uncon sciousness which accompany ether.

There is probably no place in the world where analytical chemistry can bring to its aid more modern method than at the institute. From the proress made so far by the chemist th properties of Stipa vaseyi are expected to be known in a comparatively short time. Means of making the anaesthetic available for surgeons will then be taken, but not, of course, until the most exhaustive experiments have been made to confirm its usefulness.

It Brought Berbers and the Young Forester Together. By CLARISSA MACKIE. Copyright, 190, by American Press

Barbara Owen parted the flaps of the tent and drank in with delighted eyes the scene before her. The little camp perched almost on the edge of the precipice commanded a magnificent view of the snow topped Cascade range blushing under the first sure of the tent and as supported to his arm overcome by a strange emotion. She was glad that the forester was not there to witness it.

The stump of the white spruce arose like a five foot shaft of marble; the bark had been planed off until the wood showed white as satin and as supported to his arm overcome by a strange emotion. She was glad that the forester was not there to witness it. range blushing under the first rays of smooth; the top was rounded, and on the rising sun.

Barbara went to another tent and called ber father. He replied by a Mrs. Owen's resting place. The young yawn, followed by a racking cough, hemlocks had been thinned out until Then she hastened to a third tent and they formed a green semicircle about prepared breakfast.

Presently James Owen came forth. "Hungry as a bear, Bab," he said. "The very smell of that coffee makes me feel ten years younger!"

"I wish the taste of it would make you feel ten times better," said Barbara as she placed the meal on the

Barbara chatted brightly during the meal and when it was over completed her household tasks, and, leaving her father swinging in a hammock among the trees with a book between his thin fingers, she disappeared in the forest.

The path she trod was faintly defined by disturbed brown needles, and it followed a course marked by high branched trees, winding in and out. skirting a thicket of dwarfed spruce or leading over a roughly bridged gully to a broad wagon trail.

Before she reached the wagon trail Barbara turned abruptly to the left. Here a giant spruce lifted a naked white shaft high above the surrounding trees of the forest.

Crowding about the spruce was a starved for want of light and air. and a low mound covered with brown needles. Dry eyed and tearless, Barbara sat down in the dimness and tried to face a future that was ominously near-a future when her father should be laid beside her mother in another

She had met these men occasionally of the splendid work in which they were engaged.

Barbara watched him with interest, confident that he would not penetrate into the thicket.

When he came to the spruce he stopped suddenly, leaned back and squinted his eyes at the white shaft above his bead. He knelt down and examined the young hemlocks and once more drew out his notebook. Barba-ra, silent and brown, blending with the background of brown trunks, was unobserved urtil the forester drew his hatchet and cut a deep incision in the spruce tree. The girl was on her feet in an instant,

"Stop!" she cried. "Don't do that!" The man started and peered as if some brown wood fairy had arisen before his b wildered eyes. Barbara laughed she dily.

"It sounds like a school oration, Woodman, spare that tree; but, you see, my mother is buried here—and—and—the tree marks her grave."

The man had removed his hat and looked at her with respectful attention. Barbara noted that he was young, perhaps thirty, with a crop of thick, sunburned hair and a handsome, well tanned face lighted by keen dark eyes.

"I am very sorry." He hesitated. "I would not do anything to pain you; but, you see, it is my duty to take care of the forest. For the safety of the other and younger trees this dead spruce should come down."

Barbara's eyes filled with tears as she bowed her head against the white trunk of the spruce. "We thought it would be quite undisturbed here in the forest." she sobbed. "There are only three of us-mother here-she died suddenly; father, back at the camp, where he is trying to regain his health in the open, and I. I dare not tell father about the tree. He loves to come here when he is strong enough. The trees sing overhead"-

The forester stepped forward and placed a finger on her sleeve. "Please do not cry." he said awkwardly. "Will you trust me to respect this little spot in the forest and yet do my duty to my employer?

Barbara looked at his steady eyes and the friendly smile on his clean cut mouth. "Yes," she said slowly: 'I will trust you."

"Will you give me your mother's name and the date of her birth and death?" he asked, pulling his notebook

Puzzled and a little curious, Barbara gave him the desired information and, with a word of thanks, turned away. "One week from today you may come again," said the forester gravely.

"Thank you." said Barbara once more, and then she stepped lightly into the trail and was gone.

It was a long week for Barbara Barbara happily.

Seven mornings she saw the re-tion of the rising sun on the west

"Who has done this?" asked Owen huskily.

Barbara told him in a few words of her meeting with the young forester, and after awhile the two walked over to the wagon trail in the direction of the metallic ax blows.

He saw them coming and came to meet them. "I am glad you liked it." he said simply in response to Mr. Owen's warm thanks, "It was better that we should remove the tree in a shipshape manner than permit it to fall of its own accord."

"But the work you did on the stump, young nun-it was more than kind of you; we are deeply grateful."

"I had a mother once myself," he replied soberly. "Come over to the camp and see us,

Mr."- said Owen suggestively. "My name's Charter - Benjamin Charter," said the forester quickly. "You are very kind; I shall be glad to come."

After that day James Owen improved rapidly. There would never be thicket of young hemlock, ragged and hope of his complete recovery, but a return to even moderate health was an There were an opening in the thicket encouragement to his only child. They walked through the woods to the little hemlock circle and felt that here was a spot they might call .neir own forever.

Their walks often included a search for the foresters engaged in their interesting work of conserving the native trees and guarding against encroaching lumbermen or wandering flocks of sheep or devastating herds of cattle

Benjamin Charter came to the camp and proved an entertaining companion for father and daughter. He playshirt open at a strong brown throat ed cards with Mr. Owen or read to the and a canvas hat tossed back on a invalid the week old newspapers that came their way. > Then one day Barbara and her father walked in the forest. They had gone along the wagon trail and were drawing near the working foresters. There was a sound of blows on wood, a silence and then a crashing tearing sound close at hand. Somebody shouted wildly and pushed Barbara and her father out of harm's way, somebody who was too late himself to spring from under the falling tree and so was caught beneath the weight of heavy green branches.

A tree had fallen in an unexpected direction, and Benjamin Charter's quickness had probably saved Mr. Owen and his daughter from injury, if not death. When the tree was removed by the score of laborers that sprang into view Charter was quite unconscious. He was carried into the camp on the precipice, and one of the men rode madly away to the distant settlement for a doctor. In the meantime Barbara and her father did what they could. The forester opened his eyes upon their anxious faces.

I am glad you are safe," he said feebly.

"You saved my worthless life and Barbara's precious one," said Owen brokenly. "I wish I could reward you, Charter. You have been a friend indeed to me."

"I wish you would give me Barbara," said Charter, with more strength. "I haven't got very much, but I can take care of her and make her comfortable."

"What do you say, Bab?" asked her Barbara's face, bent above the injured man's, was sufficient answer.

"You needn't wait till I'm gone to be happy," suggested Mr. Owen after the doctor had come and pronounced Charter's injuries to be slight-more painful than dangerous. "You can get married as soon as you are well enough to hobble around and find a minister."

"Thank you, sir." said Charter. His arm was about Barbara as she knelt beside his cot.

"I suppose you know who you're marrying," resumed Owen, with a twinkle in his eyes. "Barbara Owen, the sweetest girl in the world," returned Charter prompt-

Weeping Animals.

Travelers through the Syrian desert nave seen horses weep from thirst. A mule has been seen to cry from the pain of an injured foot, and camels, it is said, shed tears in streams. A cow sold by its mistress, who had tended it from ealthood, wept pitifully A young soke ape used to cry with vexation if Livingstone didn't nurse it in his arms when it asked him to. Wounded apes have died crying, and anes have went over their young ones slain by hunters. A chimpanzee trained to carry water jugs broke one and cried, which proved sorrow, though it wouldn't mend the jug. Rats, discovering their young drowned, have been moved to tears of grief A giraffe which a bootsman's rifle had injured begun to cry when approached Sea flons often weep over the loss of their young. Gordon Cumming observed tears tricking down the face of a dying elephant And even an orang outang when deprived of its mango was so vexed that it took to weeping. There is little doubt, therefore, that animals do cry from grief or weep from pain or annoyance. Harper's Weekly.

After teaching and bealing in Galilee

Jesus begins what may be called a Stops itching tostenuy. second period of His Galilean ministry, from early summer A. D. 28 to April cently executed the undersigned will A. D. 29. This second period was immediately offer the entire stock of marked by the sending forth of the Dry Goods, Notions, etc., formerly twelve as missionaries, and by their labors. It is a new departure in the spread of the Gospel. So far Jesus had taught and performed the whole duties in establishing His kingdom, but now others are called into active work.

Jesus had beheld the great field ready unto harveste. This people, who had been suffering so much politically and socially, were scattered almost all over the known world, they seemed without a shepherd. Israel had never suffered more except when in absolute bandage, but the hope defered of a king to re lieve them, was now beginning to show Its effect, and Jesus felt it (9: 36-38) and called His disciples to active labors in the endeavor to relieve His beloved people Israel.

Jesus was a Jew. His disciples were Jews, and they were sent first among their own people throughout their own country. The works recordeed as done by Jesus and His disciples show us of the people—all manner of sickness Ohio Railroad have been announced, and suffering, slight redress for wrongs due to the advancement of F. B. Blaser inflicted socially or politically as a people sorely distressed. The wrongs of man to man were never more clearly shown, and in His prest pity and compassion for this condition, all the result of sin, Jesus shows what effect it had upon Him. It was what drew Him to earth, to be a Saviour of mankind. The twelve were commissioned to go forth to the relief of this condition.

If the condition in Israel impressed Jesus so greatly, how does the world of Court of Caroline County. this day impress Him? Palestine, the size of Delaware, was a great harvest field; what is New York city. London, China and Hindustan? The field is one grain for the gathering. It is nearly and autiseptic. Try them. two thousand years since Christ said, Go into all the world, and preach the Gospel," and yet the harvest is barely begun. "The laborers are few " ..

The twelve were Jews, Christ's own lying in Willards Election District, of Wicomico County and State of Maryland, located on the North-easterly side of and binding upon the New Hope Mill Pond; bounded on the North west by the William B. Brattan land, on the North by the land of Annie Truitt, on the East by the said land of the said Truitt and the land of George Edward Davis and on the South by the said land of the said Davis and the land of Levin Pusey; CONTAINING 125 ACRES OF LAND, MORE OR LESS.

The twelve were Jews, Christ's own countrymen, and not, of an average, above the ordinary men of that day. They were reared and taught as Christ our family for eight years out of the ordinary Jewish home, and yet men (combined) of power. The training of men is what counts. These men were of Israel, the nation that had is to be opened in Hagerston 10.11 and 12. been trained for centuries for this work. The foundation of Christ's earthly kingdom was laid among these people, who had been especially trained to God's purpose, a peculiar people and years of training tells. Men of such training combine as a mighty force when occasion requires. Occasionally great leader or reformer appears upon the stage of action to direct a move- Beware Of Ointments for Caarrh ment, but the force of it lies with good, honest, ordinary men. These men, singly, may not appeal to you as you study of their homes and social position in Galilee, but note the effect of their combined effort and know what may be accomplished by the earnest effort of good men-

The twelve were instructed as to where and how they were to go, what to say and how to act. They were warned as to what they might expect in interest to us. If we desire to be teachduties and responsibilities and the gaged in it. If we are to simply remain one of the flock think of what we owe those who teach, it is herein plainly stated. The conditions are not so trying today as when the apostles engaged in the work, yet it is still exact ing and requires one's entire attention and utmost endeavor. By the teaching of truth offense will come, for the sword of the Gospel does not always bring peace when first applied. The labor promises great return. God will care for His own.

Christ bade His disciples labor, looking toward a full proof of Himself as the Messiah. This they afterward realized. The workers of to-day are commanded to labor, looking forward to His second coming to reward the faithful. A great army of workers are relying upon this promise and fully enjoying the anticipation of the completion of His kingdom, when by right. cous judgment His beloved shall come into their own.

This is a great mission lesson, home and foreign. There is need of greater carnestness in living, what manner of life we liv . how we are to prepare our-selves to be ready to do and be in life what God would have us to do and be. Too many are talling in this; life, to them, is an easy, careless, undetermined, drifting condition to be enjoyed or bemoaned as condition presents. Life is as earnest as we with light from God, our Creator, make it, and we must take our place and do our part to make it that God expects it to be. He who fails in this will in the end find himself ultimately runk into a profoundness of utter solitude, an absence of life or enoyment that leads to despair owing to the lack of growth in true life which permits the enjoyment of fellowship with the spirit of truth, the ultimate, editorial was published in eek's COURIER under the n, "The Attitude of the oury Realty Company." at least we flatter ourselves the belief that it met with lar favor. But only the hal been told. We called the lic's attention last week to the rently adroit scheme of that pany, hatched for the purpose eplacing at least two members the present City Council with en who are officially and finanfally interested in the developent of the land of the Humphreys tate and the building of two irawbridges at the expense of the nunicipal taxpayers. We learn ow that the scheme has a double purpose and that the mighty (?) ufluence of another public service orporation is being stealthily put o work. The five-year contract between the Mayor and City Council and the Salisbury Light. Heat & Power Company expires during the present year, If our editorial last week met with public pproval what will the taxpayers them with the fact that the men proposed for councilmen, and the man who has been selected to fill the Mayor's chair are not only directors of the Salisbury Realty Company, but also affiliated with and financially interested in the Electric Light Company? It is an astounding fact and of too much moment to be over-

We have heard no denial of the proposed scheme and do not for a moment anticipate any. Why should we when the statement was defiantly made last Saturday evening by the president of the Realty Company that the necessary bridges would be built, and with he pressed the button, and the maid the public's money, too. Let that appeared. significant remark sink deep into the mind of every voter within the corporate limits of Salisbury, only to be remembered on the day the primaries are held.

The election of such candidates at this time would be equivalent to turning over to an enterprising set of men the dies and plates for the manufacture of Government bonds and throwing in a bonus of bond issue is completed.

The question naturally arises: Is the Salisbury Realty Company sincere? Are its promoters acting in good faith? If we have not been deluded into a wrong belief by the progress of recent events a promoter is a person who takes hold of something that is not quite as good as it might be, and makes the public believe it is better than it would be, if it was as good as it isn't. We do not believe the propositions of the company amount to an iota from any standpoint. We believe they are founded solely upon an apparently innatinble desire to secure something for nothing.

If the company is acting in good faith it would not be necessary to peddle pernicious proposals from one executive body to another. We believe it is the twenty-five twopence. Sydney Smith.

mpany and its asthe directors want. They know full well that if this is granted the saving in taxes would more than remunerate them for the expense of the bridges. (They propose to erect/the bridges if the exemption is granted). And they also know that once the bridges are erected, by waiting long enough, the stream East of the Camden bridge would be made navigable by a Government appropriation, as has been done with the North fork of the Wicomico. Salisburians are mostly from Missouri, as the saying goes. If the company is really acting in good taith, and is not governed by any selfish motive it seems that proposals to the Commissioners and Council are useless when by making the waters navigable the bridges could be compelled through the office of the War Department. Will candidates representing these interests be nominated by the people of Salisbury? We think not, Will such nefarious schemes be tolerated by the voters of this city? Again we

The candidates backed by two of Salisbury's biggest corporations may be better than the men they are striving to replace better in brain, brawn and business ability. In utter disregard, however, of what some of our more philosophic citizens may say, we believe it is an enlightened self interest rather than loyal civic pride that is the motive behind their candidacy. Ability, merit and usefulness to all are the only rights to public office and expediency is the only standard by which we judge. Will Salisbury place itself in the hands of corporations? No-o-o-o!

Editorial Jottings.

AMERICANS GOING THERE

Large Share of Homestead Enwise in the Last Eight Years-Total iber Admitted From All Sources Population Increased More

Canada has been much in the public of late owing to the settlement of entened tariff war, and nation Interest is being taken in that and its affairs. Each year Americans seek homes there, that the number is growing any is shown in the report just itted to congress by Senator thum, chairman of the immigrathe homestend entries in western da from 1900 to 1909, 86 per cent by immigrants, and 44.91 per of these were by newcomers from United States.

W. Husband, one of the secreof the commission, prepared this t, which bears solely on the imion situation in Canada. Espettention is given Canada's policy red and discouraging the classes and undesirable. Official states are quoted to show that Canada ter agricultural pursuits either as s, tenants or laborers and that s the purpose of the government to nada would tend to add to the contion of towns and cities.

n pursuing this policy organized efri is made to secure immigrants from tries which furnish the classes or es desired. The countries favored Canada in this regard are the Unitd Kingdom, France, Belgium, Hol-and, Germany, Denmark, Iceland, Fin-L Norway, Sweden and Switzerland of course, the United States. No Fort is made to get immigrants from ern and eastern Europe, and una it is the purpose of such immirants to enter agricultural pursuits ir admission to Canada is doubtful, Under Official Direction. In the United States the Canadian propagands is carried on under the general direction of an official desig-nated as inspector of agencies and tationed in Detroit, Marquette, Mich.; pokane, Kansas City, Mo.; Milwaue, Watertown, S. D.; St. Paul, Omaa. Grand Forks, N. D.; Toledo, Chiago, Great Falls, Mont.; Indianapolis, on, Syracuse and Pittsburg. About 200 subagents are employed in us parts of the United States. To these is paid a bonus of $3 a man, $2 a woman and $1 a child on bona fide settlers induced by them to settle in ern Canada. During the years 1901 to 1908, inclusive, 393,908 emigrants from the United States were admitted to Canada.

During the thirty-three months ending March 31, 1909, the number of emigrants from the United States to Canada was 153,119. The states furnishing the bulk of this emigration afternoon that divorce and unhapp. were as follows:

Illinois, 8,123; Iowa, 8,169; Massachusetts, 5,42; Michigan, 5,547; Minnesota, 22,792; Nehraska, 2,822; New York, 5,343; North Datoia, 29,303; Oregon, 2,297; Pennsylvanis, 2,236; South Dakota, 2,587; Washington, 15,705, and Wisconsin, 5,416.

Concerning emigration from the United States to Canada the report

Probably no other considerable move-ment of population from one country to another at the present time is so largely composed of agricultural people as the emigration from the United States to Canada. * * 120,450, or more than 78 per cent of the total number, going to Canada in 1907, 1908 and 1909 were classed as farmers or farm laborers, which includes also accompanying members of families, while less than 23 per cent of all other igrants to Canada during the same period were of those classes.

There is at the present time a large emigration from Canada to the United States of persons who intend taking up a permanent residence, there.

1,244,597 Persons Admitted.

The total emigration to Canada from all sources from 1900 to 1909 was 1,244,597, or a number equal to 26.1 per cent of the total population of the Dominion in 1901. The races of nationalities furnishing the largest numthat period were:

United States, 393,908; English and Welsh, 377,801; Scotch, 94,279; Galician, 62.-500; Italian, 48,240; Jewish, 40,347; Irish, 39,184; Russian, 28,106; German, 17,079; Swedish, 14,119; French, 12,468; Japanese, 12,439; Bukowinian, 10,413; Finnish, 9,909.

While Canada has been successful encouraging immigration along de sired lines, she has been equally suc-cessful in pursuing a rigid exclusion policy with reference to those classes of lumigrants who were not desired.

The law is peculiarly elastic in that it permits the governor in council, never he considers it necessary or expedient, to prohibit the landing in anda of any specified class of emigrants who have gone to Canada therwise than by continuous journey from the country of which they are univer or citizens.

In dealing with oriental immigra-tion Causda has recognized the neces-sity of a policy which practically ex-cludes Asistic laborers.

Takes Root Among Springfield, Mass

Spread Over Great Britain and Australia, is introduced in Y. M. C. A. of Bay State+City by Young Man-From Edinburgh.

Clad in khakt suits, golf hose, be and rakish slouch hats, the You Men's Christian association scouts Springfield. Mass., organized a few days ago, are objects of interest to their elders as well as of envy to a large invenile confingent. The idea is adopted from England, which has more than 200,000 boy scouts. The Springfield patrol, which is the first to be organized in the United States, is in charge of Edwin D. Horsfield of Edinburgh, a student at the International Young Men's Christian ass tion training school in Springfield, Mass. Mr. Horsfield had experien in the movement in his native country and consequently is well adapted to give the boy scout idea the necessary impetus to make it a success in the United States.

Mr. Horsfield admits that he is experimenting in an untried field, but he is confident that once the idea is understood it will spread as rapidly as it did in England, Scotland, Germany and Australia. A boy must be thir-teen years old to be eligible for enrollment as a scout. Some of the boys are seventeen or eighteen years old and a few twenty years.

Must Be Useful and Help Others. The scouf law contains much that appeals to the schoolboy code of honor. Its fundamental principles are as follows: . First.-A scout's honor is to be rusted.

Second.-A scout is loyal to his country and his employers. Third.—A scout's duty is to be use ful and to help others. Fourth.-A scout is a friend to all and a brother to every other scout, no matter to what social class the other

Fifth.-A scout is courteous Sixth.-He is a friend to all animals.

Seventh.—He obeys orders.

Eighth.—He smiles and whistles under all circumstances. Ninth.-He is thrifty.

The pledge which the boy scout takes is as follows: "I will do my duty to God and my country. I will do my best to help others, whatever it costs me. 'I know the scout law and will obey it." "Taking this pledge indicates that the boy intends to roll up his sleeves and get into business," said Mr. Hersfield. "In England the boy scout is an important personage. He is not only building up his body, but he is proving himself useful, How Scouts Are Benefited. "Many a fond mother who a few years ago was opposed to having her son join the boy scouts now concedes that the experience has brought about a marked improvement in her son. A first class scout must prove himself to have a practical knowledge of first aid to the injured, signaling (Morse, semaphore and staff), swimming, life saving and other branches. His scouting games teach him to be observant, ged boots Henry T. Gage, ex-governor and he learns of nature and of animals. His endurance powers are also greatly strengthened. "Many parents in the United States are looking for some organization which will develop everything that is good in their boys. There is a boys' department in the Young Men's Chris tian association, and there are boys' tailor, who makes a specialty of diplo clubs and Bible classes, yet the avermatic outfitting a circular sternly in age boy longs within himself for something else. "The object is not to make soldlers of the boys. They are peace scouts

Mrs. Bowser knew when to stop, and she stopped. Not another word was said about the bird until they had finished dinner and reached the sitting room. Mrs. Bowser Names It. Ten minutes previously Mrs. Bowser had known when to stop, but now her acumen had suddenly deserted her. She hesitated a little, but finally took the plunge and blurted out: "It's nothing less than a young crow!"

Bowser jumped just seven feet. She measured it half an hour later with the tapeline.

"By the jumping jiminy cracky, but what do you mean?" be shouted at Inst what I said. Mr. Bowser, you born in the country. You must ave seen thousands of crows. I should have thought you could have spotted this bird at once as a crow Look at the size of him. Look at his plumage. Look at his claws and beak It's a last year's crow."

"Never, never, never! If that bird is a crow, then this house is the Ca thedral of Cologne Crow! Why.

He choked and gasped and flourished his arms around, but Mrs. Bowser gave her attention to the bird. She saw that something was about to happen. Something did happen. That bird was glad to be there. Things looked as if there was a turn for the better for him. He therefore opened his mouth and cawed. It was the regular caw of a regular crow. No man in America except Mr. Bowser could have disputed it. He did.

"Mrs. Bowser, have you lost the little brains you once bad?" he roared as he glared down at the innocent

"You may call it an oriole if you wish," she replied. "The fact remains, however, that that poor old woman with tears in her eyes worked a gum game on you."

Butcher Corroborates Mrs. B. Mr. Bowser tried to roar some more, but it wouldn't come. For a minute it looked as if apoplexy would come Then the red in his face turned white and his voice hardly above a whisper as he said:

"Irs. Bowser, you have made a fiendish assertion. You must stand or fall by it. If it is a crow I shall beg your pardon: if not, divorce must follow. Our family butcher shall be the judge. He owns a farm-he knows a crow when he sees one. I will take the oriole right over there."

"But if you want a bird around the house why not keep the crow?" she answered. "Perhaps he has been taught to talk; if so, you and he can pass many a pleasant evening to gether."

"You-you stand or fall!" he hissed as he went out of the door with cage in hand. As he went out the crow cawed again. Two caws don't always make a crow, but in this case it came pretty near it.

The butcher welcomed Mr. Bowser with a smile, and when asked if he knew a crow from an oriole he said he guessed he did. The paper was removed from the cage, and Mr. Bowser stood back.

The crow cawed. There was an in terrogation after it as if he was asking where he was at. The butcher gurgled.

Mr. Bowser shivered "Well?"

"Who says it isn't a crow?"

The man of meat and bones came out from behind his counter and up to Mr. Bowser and whispered in his ear: "It's the same hallucination Ir. Cook has! Get home and soak your feet and get to bed! Leave the crow here. I'll kill and dress him and sell him to some blind man for an overgrown squab!"

City Fire Alarm Should Be Care fully Selected.

A recent published announce ment is to the effect that a fire alarm system is to be installed in this city. We note the fact with considerable interest and fully appreciate the endeavor of the Mayor and City Council to provide this much needed improvement. W seriously question, however, the plan of the system as it is now proposed. A recent interview with an official of the Diamond State Telephone Company, through which the proposed plan is to be operated, reveals, we believe facts which render the contemplat ed method undesirable. As it is now proposed the Diamond State Telephone Company is to install an electrically operated contrivance in the tower of the Court House by which the alarm of fire will be sounded from the City Hall The city is to be divided into sections with a certain signal for each section and when a fire is discovered the following operation becomes necessary: The person first noticing the blaze calls the central office of the telephone with the City Hall. When the connection is made with the department headquarters, the person at the other end of the line tells someone in the City Hall the location of the burning building. The person answering the telephone at the City Hall then pres ses a button a given number of times, according to the section of the city in which the fire is raging, and this signal is mechanical ly repeated on the bell in the Court House tower. The idea is to notify the volunteer firemen of the section of the city where they are needed.

On its face the proposition seems to be a good one, but when carefully analyzed, we believe, as stated before, that such a system would be unadvisable. In the first place a system operated in this manner makes it necessary for the alarm to pass through one more person's hands than at present-Recent experience has shown that when It is necessary to turn in an alarm of fire the city should not be dependent upon the willinguess of even one person. In addition to this we learn that while the Diamond State Tele phone Company proposes to install the system and maintain it at its expense, it will cost the city between $250.00 and $300.00 for the electrical machinery to be in stalled in the Court House. This must be paid by the city and is the price quoted by the Western Electric Company for the equipment. Another noteworthy feature of the plan is that after the city has purchased the equipment, the telephone company will install and

The following system has been installed and successfully operated | nated. in many small cities: The municipality is blocked off into as many sections as are necessary and a call box is installed in the center of each section. The box is locked but the key remains always in the lock which is protected with smaller box covered with glass These alarm or call boxes are numbered and connected with the headquarters so that when any person discovers a fire he simply breaks the glass protecting the key, opens the box, and by pulling a small lever automatically sounds the number of the box from which the alarm is turned in. It is only necessary to pull the lever once. The number of this box, by this simple operation is repeated four times in the engine house and four House. The firemen, upon counting the number of strokes once know the exact location of the fire and the city depends absolutely upon no one to repeat the message giving the alarm. In nearly every instance where this system has been installed, a connection is also made with manufacturing plants situated in different sections in which the alarm is also sounded automatically at the time the lever in the call box is pulled. These alarms must necessarily be located in plants which have a steam whistle and where power is kept up all night. After counting the

As an example of such a system we give the following illustration: Salisbury, for instance, would be divided into seven sections or fire districts, one box being located in the vicinity of the B., C. & A. Ry . station, another near the N. Y., P. & N. station, one in the heart of the city, one in South Salisbury, one in Camden, one in California and another in Jersey. The boxes could be numbered respectively 3, 4, 5, 6, 12, 13 and 14. Some one notices a fire in Camden. He runs to the Camden box, opens it and the number 1-2, one tap, a short but distinct pause and two taps, are automatically sounded in the fire department, from the Court House tower and in the mills from which the whistles are to be blown. The same signal is immediately ing. sounded by the loud whistles, and in the space of less than a minute all firemen are notified of the exact location of the fire.

They will be away about the same amount of money that would be necessary if the present plan is carried out. It would make the city independent, be quicker, more certain and the results would be materially better.

The Post Office Appointment.

It is with the greatest of pleas ure that we announce that Mr. Marion A. Humphreys, present postmaster at Salisbury is a candidate for re-appointment. His record in office has been of such a nature as to bring forth the unsolicited endorsement of all of the merchants and business men of this city. Salisbury has made wonderful strides since Mr. Humphreys was first appointed but there has never been a moment that the postoffice has not kept apace with the times. No better office equipment and no better service to the public is to be had in any postoffice in the times from the bell in the Court same class in the State. As Salbury has advanced he has auticipated the needs and requirements of the patrons of the office and the result is the splendid service which we now receive. We congratulate Mr. Humphreys upon the excellency of his past services and we believe we express the opinion of the public generally when we state that his re-appointment will meet with the unquestioned ap proval of the citizens of Salisbury.

"The mince ple idea is my own." continued the major. "I sent a few over as an experiment. The natives cried for 'em. They came 200 miles to buy 'em. "For centuries and centuries," said the major as he got up to walk around a bit, "the natives of South Africa have been ignorant of the mince pie. They had yearned for something, but they knew not what. They took their missionaries roasted, baked and boiled. but the yearning was still there. Joues the mince ple filled it. It struck the spot. La Grippe

"I had suffered several weeks with LaGrippe. Had pains in 3 my head and eyes. It felt as though there was a heavy weight on the top of my head, until it seemed that my brain would burst. I was so nervous that I could not rest or sleep. When I dozed off I would awake with a sudden jerking of my whole body. Dr. Miles' Nervine, Heart Remedy and Nerve and Liver Pills cured me. A number of friends have since realized the same benefits."

MRS. ALVIN H. LOCKS,

Seabrook, N. H. The after effects of LaGrippe are often more serious than the disease, as it leaves the system in a weakened condition that invites more serious troubles, such as pneumonia, etc.

Burnen Of Violets

It Made a Change In a Weman's

By REGINALD D. HOVEN. Copyright, 1916, by American Press

It was spring, the window beside m was open, and as the train sped on I reveled in the panorams of passing objects. There was that tender green on the trees which appears only once a year for about a week, usually in

Then the train stopped at a station. and a little girl on the platform with a basket on her arm filled with violets looked up at me with a pair of eyes of the same color as the flowers. though of a lighter shade, beseeching me to buy. I handed her a coin, for which she gave me a bunch of the Violets, and I put them in my belt.

If that little girl had not sold me those violets and if I had not thrust them in my belt my field in life would have been entirely different. An or-phan with a fortune, I had resolved to devote myself and it to the poor. Several girl friends of mine had made unfortunate marriages, and their stories had filled me with a repugnance to tying myself up to a husband. "If I marry," I said to my-self, "I shall get some selfish man who will marry my fortune and leave me out in the cold. This is a world of selfishness. I detest selfishness and am resolved to live for others." I was going to the city to take a course of medicine. After graduation I would open as office and treat women and children who were ill and had no money to pay without compensation.

When the train reached the terminal and I was walking down the platform between the lines of people who were there to welcome friends a young man stepped from the line, lifted his hat, smiled at me and said:

"I judge by the violets on your belt that you are Lucy. I am John Ridgway. Let me take your bag. This way, please."

Now, it was plain that the young man had made a mistake. Doubtless he was there to meet some one he didn't know and that by which she was to be recognized was a bunch of violets worn in her belt. I was young and not averse to an adventure. I was curious to learn what would be the upshot of it all, At any rate, I would let him have his way for a time. So I gave him my satchel and walked beside him, waiting for him to say something more. "We're going to do all we can for you," he went on. "You're to live with us without paying a cent till you are perfectly able to pay. Mother has a situation already engaged for you at to you, and I will be a brother." How refreshing! There was surely nothing selfish about this young man who looked down on me with a pair of frank, sympathetic eyes. I was interested to know more of him. I suffered myself to be led along passively till we reached the street, where he put me into a car, getting in himself just what time I would inform him of his mistake I did not know. To tell the truth, I dreaded this entry into a big city possibly as much as the poor girl for whom he had mistaken me. I had intended to go to a hotel until I could fird a suitable boarding place. Why not go with this young man to his home, look it over and those in it and if I liked it and them ask them to take me to board. Time enough to announce the mistake that and insisting on paying my fare. At

had been made in my identity afterward. We alighted before a small house, went in, and a lovely old lady and a young girl welcomed me. "My dear," said the former, "I cannot see that you resemble your father or mother in the slightest degree." "I think Cousin Lucy somewhat resembles the Morgans," said the young

"It doesn't matter," said the young man, "whom she resembles. She's our cousin and in distress, poor girl. It's our pleasure to encourage her and help her, and we're going to do it. Perhaps we can marry her to a rich man, eh?

What do you say to that, mother? "Well, I suppose that as long as she's been brought up in affluence it would be better for her. But I don't wish Rose to get any such idea into her head. It isn't necessary in her case."

All of this was so entertaining to me that I could not bear to end it. This last plan of John's, to marry me to a rich man, was simply delightful. What would be have thought had he known that I considered all rich men the emembodiment of selfishness? And how he would have opened his eyes had he known that I possessed an income of $30.000 a year!

But my deception must come out the moment this girl for whom I had been mistaken appeared. If she had come on the train with me she would doubtless soon arrive at the house. If she had been delayed she would write or telegraph. As soon as either of these two alternatives had occurred I would make a confession, ask to be taken in as one of the family and in the end do something very nice for these kind hearted people. Meanwhile I set my wits to work to learn from them as much about her as possible. I found. however, that they did not know very much themselves. They had heard that she had been left alone in the my income.

was that I settled myself down with the family who had befriended me as Miss Lucy Saxton. I gradually picked up what little information her audit and cousins had of her, including the place in which she lives i told the Ridgways that my affairs had not turned out so badly after all and I could pay them a fair price for board, but I saw that they believed this to be a subterfuge of mine to pay what I a subterfuge of mine to pay what I could not afford to pay, and I would be depriving them of a real pleasure in helping me if I did not accept their terms; therefore I acceded to them.

When several days had passed with out any news of the girl who had been expected I sent an agent to the place where she lived to investigate. My agent returned and reported that at first it was supposed that Lucy Seaton would be a pauper. She had then accepted her aunt and cousin's offer of a home. But it later appeared that she would still be well off. She had then permitted the matter to go by default, having no use for those who had offered to serve her and thinking that she might be called upon to serve them.

I declined the offer of the situation that had been obtained for me, saying that I had found a little money among my father's assets and would study medicine. Deferring from time to time my confession, I entered upon my studies, paying the Ridgways a mini-mum sum for my keeping and depositing in a savings bank to their credit four times the amount. Every day i expected they would hear something from their cousin, but I did not care if they did. Though I was sailing under false colors, I had nothing on my conscience and was continually contriving ways to benefit them. They were quite poor, and whenever the wolf came prowling about the door I would send it away, inventing some monstrous falsehoods as to how I had managed to do so.

How it was that for so long a time nothing occurred to reveal that I was an impostor I was at a loss to divine. sent my agent again to the place where Miss Seaton lived for a further investigation and learned that she was living in affluence, her property bay ing turned out to be very considerable And yet she was not even communicating with those who had befriended her when it was supposed she needed aid and comfort.

"I was right," I remarked to my self, "in assuming that this is a selfish world. But there are exceptions among whom are the Ridgways." "Cousin John," I said one day, "you promised that you would marry me to a rich man. I have seen nothing of John looked very uncomfortable. haven't got my eye on exactly the right one." he said. "Besides, you don't need to marry a rich man. You may have been brought up in affluence. but you take a mighty vigorous hold of the world. You're going to be a physician and earn your own living."

"You're right, John." I replied. "but it was very kind of you to intend so much good for me. I owe you some return for your intention. I think !

shall have to find a rich girl for you." "In the first place," be replied. "! don't wish to be a tail to any woman's kite, and, in the second place, even if I loved a rich girl I would never have the effrontery to propose to her

"She might propose to you." "I wouldn't wish her to propose to me. Besides, I know a poor girl, Lucy. that I'm not sure but I want."

"No. You shall not marry a poor girl. You can't. What would your mother and sister do if your efforts were required to support a wife and family?"

"Well, then, I won't marry at all." "I'm going to take you to see a girl who has means and whom I think if you try you can get."

"I won't go." "Very well; I'll bring her to see

"I'll not be at home."

John left me with a scowl on his brow. I knew very well what that scowl meant. I knew the "poor girl" he was not sure but be wanted Furthermore, I was sure that he did want her. Besides, I knew she wanted him.

Soon after this some relative of the Ridgways wrote them she had beard that Lucy Seaton was living at her old home in fine style. They were much amazed at this information, considering it a good instance of the way people could be mistaken. But the incident warned me that I must forestall such additional information by a confession. One evening when John came in met him in the hall and told him that I wished him to come into the living room that I might introduce him to a girl with a fortune. He demurred, but I took him by the hand and dragged him into the room,

"What's all this nonsense?" he said. "There's no girl here." "Yes, there is, and a rich one at that." "What's the joke?" "John." I said. "I have a confession to make."

And I made it. I married John Ridgway, but before the wedding I settled an income on his mother and sister sufficient to meet their wants. I give my time to my husband and children instead of to the poor, as I had intended, but I try to make up for something the poor have lost by giving them a portion of

Have You Diptopis?
Diplopia, as its name signifies, defect which causes the eye to see two images of the same object. Of course the drunkard's temporary diplopla is well known, but it is possible for a quite sober person to perceive two holes instead of one, as the comic nals have it, and yet be a total stainer. Diplopia is usually the re of squint or general eye weakness and is necessarily a distressing mainty. As a rule, the defect manifests itself in regard to small objects at som tance—eight feet or so. For ins one lamp will be seen slightly another or to right or left. As the false image is fainter than the genuine one, but when I looked throug the prism, which made me for the time being diploptic, I saw the second image quite as clearly as the first, but with a tendency to wander. The farther away the false image appears from the true the less distinct is its outline. Strand Magazine.

When Mark Twain was beginn his career as a humorous lecturer he one day arranged with a woman acquaintance that she should sit in a box and start the applause when he should stroke his mustache. The lecturer started off so well that he did not need any such help, however, for he caught the audience from the first. By and by, when not saying anything worthy of particular notice, he happened to pull his mustache, and his anxious ally in the box at once broke into furious applause. Mark was all but broken up by the misadventure and ever afterward carefully avoided employing such help to success.

It marks a change in the Master's teaching. Testing an Explosive. One of the most dangerous of ex-plosives is juddle of nitrogen, a black. powder which the slightest touch will often cause to explode when dry with grent violence. In experiments to de-termine the cause of its extreme ex-plosiveness some damp lodide of nitro-gen was rubbed on the strings of a bass viol. It is known that the strings of such an instrument will vibrate when those of a similar instrument having an equal tension are played upon. In this case, after the explo-sive had become thoroughly dry upon the strings, another bass viol was brought near and the strings sounded. At a certain note the iodide of nitrogen on the prepared instrument ex-ploded. It was found that the explo-sion occurred only when a rate of vi-

Exploits of "Buffalo" Jones Wil Lasso and Firegrackers.

EXPECTS TO TACKLE LIONS

Leopards, Giraffes and Other Beasts Also Bagged by Famous Old Time Cowboy—Uses Lassos Made to Hold Up a Weight of Two Tons—To Bring Back Live Trophics

"Buffalo" Jones (C. J. Jones), old time cowboy and still youthful at strty-five one better in the African Jungle. While the former president, who delights to be called "a great faunal naturalist," has been slaying wild beasts, "Buffalo" Jones has been roping the critters in true wild western style, and he will bring the animals alive to the United States.

Here is a cablegram dated Nairobi, Africa, which was received the other day from Jones by F. T. Bird, a law-yer of New York city:

yer of New York city:

Have roped and tied rhinos, giraffes leopards, cheerishs and a variety of other wild animals. One immense rhino but made trouble. He charged all of our party close to a hundred times an smashed the tripod of the photographer; oamers. The operator escaped, and at his pistes were uninjured. We are going after lions and African buffaloes next Men, horses and dogs are in spiecidic condition.

Hunting Lions With Firegraphers There can be no doubt that "Buffalo" Jones has been "going some." When he first announced to the world that he intended to get into the jungle with some good strong rope and some trustworthy firecrackers and gather in some wild animals many persons laughed at him.

"Whoever heard of hunting lions with firecrackers?" asked one of his mighty unbealthy locality, and he'll change his base of operations mighty

Just before he left the United States Jones was a guest of the Campfire club of New York at a banquet given in his honor. The next day he slipped quietly aboard his steamer. It was not until he reached London in the middle of February that the mission of Jones was entirely known.

To a London newspaper man who interviewed him about roping lions he

"Well, the African lion is a difficult problem. It's got to be solved. I'll catch him, all right, but what will happen after that I don't pretend to know, being a hunter and not a prophet. I am taking my branding irons. and the lions I don't want I'll brand and turn loose to fight another day. "I shall try the rhinoceros, and the buffalo, too, if I can get him out of the bush. My lassos are of Russian hemp, hard twisted so that they will go through the air with the least possible resistance. Though no thicker than a little finger, my lasso will hold up a weight of two tons. When I have made a capture I tie it with a rope through which runs a steel wire.

"I believe in giving these wild things a fair sporting chance, and I'll make good or know the reason why. Other men may bring trophies of the hunt in the form of skins and skeletons. but yours truly will bring the real live article back to the United States of America or miss his guess entirely."

Personnel of the Hunting Party. One of the most interesting features of the trip of the "Buffalo" Jones party to Africa is the personnel of the party itself. Besides Jones himself. the party is made up of four men. Arthur A. Fowler, the manager of the party, is a member of a firm of iron merchants. He is a great sportsman and had arranged for a trip to Africa and was prevailed upon to take the management of the "Buffalo" Jones party. He accepted on condition that he pay all his own expenses, but was to have a full share of the sport. Mr. Fowler has a country house at Peapack, N. J., where he hunts regularly with the Essex hounds.

Guy H. Scull is a Harvard man who has been a newspaper correspondent in two wars-in Manchuria and South Africa-and he also led the party of Harvard men who went to the Bahamas on the Mayflower a little more than a year ago in search of hidden treasure. The other members of the party are Marshall D. Loveless of Roswell, N. M., and Ambrose I. Means of southern New Mexico. Both are expert cow punchers.

Naturally the most interesting per-sonality in the party is "Buffalo" Jones himself, teccuse he is the last of the great plainsmen in active life. To be sure, Buffalo Bill and Pawnee Bill are still alive, but they no longer trail big game over the prairies as s means of livelihood. This Jones does. For years Jones was government game warden of Yellowstone park and while there he made numero by roping them. Also his feat of m Curing the grizzly bears of the p made him known all over the country One of the exciting incidents of it career was the whipping of the bi-bears of the Yellowstone park "to p the fear of man into their hearts."

The Next Mayor Will Have No Easy Task.

The announcement made public during the week, by Mayor Harper, and which is published on another page of this issue, that he would not be a candidate for nomination at the municipal primaries to be held Monday night, brings to a close the official career of a worthy executive. For three terms he has filled the Mayor's chair and he has efficiently and conscientiously discharged the duties 12 and started home. He had begged of the office. His endeavor has his wife to go with him to the opera, been to place Salisbury at the head of the list of the smaller cities of the State and he retires position on the part of his wife to knowing that his purpose has been permit him to go where he liked, prothankless job. His interest in at home. She had never taken an in-Salisbury's welfare has caused him few chosen friends to people of fashto spend several times the small ion. Un many occasions, especially | denly a man confronted then the question of street paving was an issue, a large number of representative citizens opposed him, but he had his own views and had the temerity to stick to them and his reward now is in the satisfaction of knowing that even his opponents are pleased with the result.

We will not know, until Monday night's primaries, who his successor will be. But we feel safe in making the prediction that the next mayor of Salisbury willhave no easy task. Mr. Harper will be a hard man to follow. The office requires a man who is willing to make the same sacrifices that Mr. Harper has made. It requires a man of sound judgment, executive ability. It requires a man who holds the interests of the city above everything else, a man of principle.

the nomination of Mr. B. Frank Kennerly for Mayor and the return of the three out-going members of the City Council, Messrs. Smith, Dennis and Bennett. This is a splendid arrangement and if the program is carried out we believe the nominations will meet with the approval of the people of Salisbury generally.

Mr. Kennerly's success in business has proven his ability as a please." manager. He has been honest in all business relations with the citizens of Salisbury and the name of any honest man commands attention and respect. It is generally believed that he is a man who is not afraid to do what he believes to be right and to such principle and we do not believe wife. that he could be influenced by any heartless corruptionist to abandon that principle. well. Mr. Kennerly has never a henchman. His success is due to political trickery.

It is true that he is financially terested in a number of local corporations. He is a director of the Salisbury Realty Company. This company, just at this time, is seeking favor at the hands of the Mayor and Council. But we believe that he is too big a man to strive to gain advantage, even for a corporation with which he is officially connected. The courage to stand by principle brings a greater reward than the trifling gain for which it is too often abandoned. We believe Mr. Kennerly possesses this courage.

If elected it is to be expected that such a man will hold the city slinterests above his own. He is thoroughly familiar with the needs of the city and will undoubtedly prove to be a most admirable successor to Mayor Charles E. Har-

Everybody Was Named Smith.

By CLARISSA MACKIE. Copyright, 1910, by American Press

While, Mary Smith was visiting her rich cousins, the Drews, in the city she met Ralph Meldon. He asked permission to call upon her at her home, East

Ralph Meldon did not get down to East Bay for several months after that. At last he closed his rooms and went down to his brother's farm, some ten miles distant from East Bay.

The next day a lumbering stage carried him over to East Bay and deposited him before the postoffice. It pleased Ralph to walk down the crooked village street and pick out the house in which Mary Smith lived.

A brown church stood at the corner where an intersecting street made a sharp triangle. Next to the church was a tiny white cottage bowered in honeysuckle vines and ivy. Tulips and hyacinths made gay the brown earth borders on either side the neat path that led to the front door.

Instinctively Ralph turned in at the was not until his hand had lifted the brass knocker that he remembered to look for the conch shell on the porch. The door opened, and a neat maid-servant looked curiously at his town cut garments.

"Is Miss Smith at home?" asked

Meldon confidently.

"Yes, sir; walk right in." Ralph followed the girl into a darkened parlor, where she left him. The tuffy little room with its rose garlanded carpet, marble topped tables and grim rows of chairs did not breathe eloquently of sunshiny Mary Smith, but Ralph's heart beat faster at the sound of a light footstep outside the door.

Presently the door opened, and a lady stood before him, tall and gaunt, with small severe features and frowning black brows. Her black hair was drawn into a hard, uncompromising knot on top of her head, and the thick lenses of her spectacles gave an added flerceness to her black eyes.

She bowed stiffly as Meldon arose to his feet, and she surveyed his gloves and stick with open disapproval. "I don't want my life insured," she apped, opening the door suggestively. Ieldon reddened under her insulting e. "Really, madam," he was be-ning when she silenced him with either do I wish to buy a set of The World's Greatest Literary Lights." or 'The European Encyclopedia,' nor ny other books for which you are the ent. I am very busy today!" She ened the door wider, but Meldon did not stir.

You are mistaken, madam. I am of an agent for anything whatever. merely called to see Miss Smith." am Miss Smith," was the tart re-

Miss Mary Smith, I should have ex-"I am Miss Mary Smith."

"Then I have made a mistake in the house. I hope you will pardon the lutrusion," said Meldon quietly as the passed through the door.

It's a common enough name," re-Joined Miss Smith less acidly as her visitor went down the steps. She looked admiringly at the tall, well setup figure as he stepped briskly up the street. "He must be looking for May Swith, I dare say he wants summer

Ralph smiled to himself as he looked at the next cottage to the one from which he had been almost forcibly ejected. It was quite as attractive as the other one, and it, too, had a large conch shell on the front porch. In response to his knock a pale, tired looking girl came to the door. "I am Mary Smith." she said in answer to his carefully worded inquiry. "I'm afraid I've made another mistake," said Ralph, with a pleasant smile as he turned away. "I am looking for Captain Smith's cottage"-"Captain Smith lives next door," interrupted the girl. "You'll find him at home, for he has just gone in." "Thank you," said Ralph relievedly.

As he walked up the next neat graveled path Ralph Meldon was painfully aware that "Smith" was not an uncommon name in East Bay and that sea captains were as thick in the village as the proverbial bees in a barrel of sugar. A half hour before there had been but one Mary Smith in the world. Now Mary Smiths confronted him at every turn or every door.

At last he would see the Mary Smith his Mary he had boldly determined to call her one day. At this point in his reflections he mounted the steps and came upon a white whiskered old gentleman swinging in a canvas hammock on the porch. The polished boots, the blue cloth suit with brass buttons, the keen gray eyes under bushy eyebrows, denoted the seafaring man. He raised himself in the hammock and peered inquisitively up at his visitor.

"Captain Smith?" queried Meldon. "Here!" bellowed that old salt, settling a blue cap on his snowy hair. "My name's Meldon. I had the ssure of meeting your daughter at Mrs. Drew's last winter, and I asked sion to call and see her." Ralph meelf growing warmer under or heard of your he bello and then, lifting his voice gry roar, he called, "Mamie! te was a sound of hurrying in beavy footfalls quite unlike t d of Mary Smith's fairy feet—and front door opened and elected a ring woman, rosy cheeked, fat, quivring with flesh and curiosity.

What is it, pa?' she demanded.
Captain Smith drew a clampine from his breast pocket and har ated the visitor with a gesture of his hand;
"One of your city beaus, Mamie. Take him away? When the reverberations of his to-rible voice had died on the still air the girl's nervous giggle broke the strain "I have made a mistake," explain

Meldon, for the third time that more "Who are you looking for?" asked the girl good naturedly.

"Miss Mary Smith. She is the data! ter of a Captain Smith. I do not know his given name." Ralph Meldon paraed at the foot of the steps and regarded first the little brown church and then the large couch shell on the porch near the captain's awinging feet

A great light broke over Miss Mamie Smith's rosy face, "I guess you mean Captain Lemuel John Smith's daugh-ter. Of course you'd, be invited, being city folks." She paused and surveyed Meldon with genuine admiration in her big brown eyes.

"She said it was near the church and had a conch shell on the porch," insinuated Raiph impatiently.

"Oh, yes, indeed—just around the corner of the church on the other side of the street. You see, almost every house on this street belongs to a Smith. Just as many folks call the village 'Smithport' as they do East Bay."
Captain Smith's white head bobbed over the edge of the hammock. "Time was," he bellowed, "when there was a Cap'n John Henry Smith in every house in this street, sir."

"Indeed." Meldon was properly astonished. "It must have made matters interesting for the postmaster."

"It did, it did, sir. Postmaster got so riled with worrying over which John Henry Smith the letters was for that he just dealt 'em out as they come to hand in the boxes, begin-ning at No. 1, one letter for each so long as they lasted until the letters give out. Then next mail time he'd begin where he left off till every man had a letter. He had a sight of trouble with the newspapers, every other one having a different brand of politicks. About once a week there'd be a row over each gitting their right letters and papers, and the wimmen folks got to know so much about each other's affairs that the postmaster give every John Henry Smith another initial to his name. Mine's Cap'n John Henry T. Smith." The captain's rubi-cund countenance disappeared once more behind the hammock.

Meldon turned the corner and march ed determinedly up the wide cross street whose rather imposing houses gave evidence of a greater prosperity

Opposite the church was an imposing red brick house, homely of architecture, but breathing forth comfort and at this moment even gayety. Strains of music drifted from the open windows, and a long stretch of striped awning made a tunnel from the gate to the front door. Into this tunnel Meldon marched regardless of impending festivities or that he was an uninvited guest.

The front door was open, his hat and stick were taken away by a fluttering maid, and he was left in the shadow of a wide doorway where he could see down the vista of a long room filled with people. He awoke to the fact that the orehestra had been playing Lobengrin's wedding march. and now the strains died away, and the measured tones of a clergyman broke solemnly into the silence.

"Dearly beloved, we are gathered together. * * this man and this woman in hely matrimony."

Meidon did not bear any more. He leaned dizzily against the door lintel and thought vaguely of that brief period in the winter when he had rejoiced in the sweet companionship of Mary Smith, and now she was being married, and he, an uninvited guest, lurked at the threshold!

The ceremony was over, and there were the murmur of voices and low laughter. Meldon leaned forward for one look at the bride. After that it would be his part to go.

The bride and groom were surrounded by a shifting group, but over there by the window, where the late afternoon sun fell athwart her golden hair and pink flushed cheeks, was his Mary Smith. Her gown of pink fluffy chiffon denoted her attendance in the bridal procession, but not as the principal. Other bridesmalds in pink chiffon hovered near ber or darted in and out of the group surrounding the ful sight equaler dan de odders,-Philbride. Meldon could now see dark hair crowned with orange Slossoms

Mary Smith saw him coming, and the light to her shining eyes set his heart to beating triumphantly. In a Loment he was at her side, and she was making explanations in her soft voice: "We live next door, in the white house. There is a shell on every porch in East Bay. I believe, but ours is such a monster it has become a landmark in the village. This is my uncle's house. My cousin, Mary Smith, has just been married. Let me introduce you. Yes; my uncle is Captain Lemuel John Smith, and father is

Captain John Lemuel Smith, and"-Meldon followed her graceful form, half understanding her rippling explanations as to the relationship of the Smiths, but fully realizing that for him there never could be but one he sparkling gaze of the old cantain | Mary Smith in the wide world.

They sat chatting for awhile, but the muddle. My wife would never forgive topics they talked about as lovers did not seem to rise up with the spontaneity of former days. There were long gaps in the conversation. The doctor yawned.

"We don't need to talk all the while." she said drowsily. "Remember what a clatter we used to keep up?" "I wonder how we did it."

There was a lull, during which the to take home with you." doctor's eyes closed, and he was beginning to draw the heavy breath of ed with the plan. He said that he had slumber when his wife started in forgotten every anniversary of his bell rang. "I'll go," said Mrs. Bemerton, starting up.

"No: you wouldn't understand." And the doctor went to the telephone "Yes; I'm Dr. Bemerton."

Reply. "I'm pretty tired." Reply. "Is he?" Reply.

"Suffering much?" Reply. "Well, I suppose I'll have to go." Mrs. Bemerton, who was listening, sighed. The doctor came back into the room the picture of woe. "Now, Joe, you said you wouldn't go out again tonight for a millionaire. You're tired out. In another moment you'd have been asleep. Why didn't you refuse?" "How could I? If you were suffering and called for a physician to relieve you and he declined to go, what would you think of him?" "Well, I suppose it can't be helped.

Will you ride?"

"No; it's not far. I'll walk." She helped the poor man on with his overcoat. He gave her a parting kiss and as he went out said:

"If I'm going to be delayed I'll telephone you, and you're not to sit up, but go to bed like a dear, good little woman, and I'll come in without disturbing you and sleep in my own room. Ta-ta, sweetheart!"

Mrs. Bemerton's regret was that her lege lord must go out after a hard day's work into a cold night to incur more responsibility. She was a practical woman and had discovered very soon that the return to courting days would not be a success. She was not therefore disturbed at the interruption on that account. Indeed, she was relieved.

As soon as the front door closed behind him Dr. Bemerton hastened his steps. A few blocks away was his club, and thither he went. Leaving his overcoat at the coat room, he went into the cafe and there found Drs. Nichols and Gilson, who bailed his entrance with shouts of satisfaction.

"What did you mean," exclaimed Bemerton to Nichols, with mock severity, "by telling me that the patient was suffering and I must come at once to relieve him?"

"I meant this." replied Nichols-"that Gilson is suffering for some one to split a bottle of ginger ale with him. As for me, I'm suffering for somecoccessores thing of the same kind."

In a state of drunken furor and because of some imaginary offense. Ben Leatherbury, a colored clothes cleaner who conducts a place in an eating house patronized by colored people at the corner of Mill and West Church streets, shot and seriously wounded Luiu West at a late hour Wednesday night. The shooting affray was the riotous termination of a birthday party to which a large number of colored people were invited.

It is alleged that there was a plenty of liquid refreshments throughout the entire evening and as is usually the case, on such occasions, trouble was the ultimate result. Things began to get hilarious shortly after midnight and it was then that Leatherbury, becoming enraged at some trivial offense, flour-ished his pistol and fired at the West woman. The bullet entered her thigh, inflicting a serious injury. She was removed to the office of Dr. Dick and from there to the hospital. It is said that she was so drunk that she scarcely realized that she had been shot. In the melee which followed the shooting, Leatherbury made good his escape and had not been captured at a late hour yesterday.

A largely attended meeting of the Parents' and Teachers' Association was held Tuesday evening in the assenbly room of the Wicomico High School. About 120 parents, teachers and scholars were present. Dr. C. Brotemarkle, as president of the organization presided. Addresses on the subject, "What Shall Be Done With Spare Hours Out of School", were made by Dr. Brotemarkle, Rev. W. T. M. Beale, Rev. Jones, several of the students of the high school and a few of the teachers of the higher grades. This organization was started dy Prof. Dye and by the meeting together of the parents and teachers great deal of good has been accomplished. At these meetings the parents and teachers become better acquainted and the methods of instruction employed in the schools are thoroughly discussed.

Notice To Automobilists.

The new automobile law is now in force and every person who drives a motor vehicle must secure a license from the Commissioner, Mr. John E. George, of Queen Anne County, who has been appointed by the Governor. The speed limit provided in the law is twelve miles an hour in the thickly settled and business sections of the cities, towns and villages of the State. In the outlaying districts provision is made for eighteen miles an hour, while in the county the speed is set at twenty-five miles. In case of an accident in which a person or animal is injured the law requires that the driver stop and upon demand show his license and render what assistance he can. Congressional Convention.

At a meeting held at the Hotel Rennert, in Baltimore, Wednesday, it was at Ocean City July 20th. This convention will nominate a Republican candidate for Congress from the East-ern Shore district.

MARYLAND REPUBLICANS

Resolutions Passed By The State Central Committee Wednesday.

The Republican State Central Committee of Maryland hereby records its unqualified indorsement of the administration of President Taft. The record of achievement for the first year of his administration, in both constructive legislation and administrative reforms and economies, July justifies the confidence reposed in him by the American people.

We commend the splendid record made by the Republicans in the General Assembly of Maryland, and condemn the gross parti-sanship and wasteful extravagance of the Democratic majority.

We declare that the revolutionary proceeding involved in the passage of the Digges Bill was a disgraceful attempt to nullify the Constitution of the United States and merited the condemnation which it received from fair minded people, at home and abroad.

The submission of another disfranchising amendment, in utter disregard of public opinion, twice emphatically expressed at the polls, calls for the severest condemnation, keeping alive as it does race animosity, without the slightest justification.

The committee hereby records its conviction that for the people of Maryland the truly paramount and decisive issues in the election about to be held are the supremacy of the Federal Constitution, the obligation of all state and municipal officers to fulfill in good faith their oaths to sustain, and the duty of all good citizens to loyally obey, the supreme law of the land.

It has been published in the Balti more papers, presumably with the intent to create a wrong impression, Beale led in prayer in the Sundy school that Mr. Toadvin would not be a can room. It is proposed to place all of the didate at the next judicial primaries. And it has been stated that he would not seek election at the hands of the people for another term after he has completed the unexpired term of Judge Holland. These statements are not true. The probabilities are that even if Judge Toadvin did not care to come before the people as a candidate that his many friends would insist on his candidacy and that he could not refuse the requests of the men who have taken such an active interest in his appointment.

The articles which have been published in the Baltimore papers were evidently intended to produce a certain effect and were published without consulting Mr. Toadvin. It is gener ally believed that he will be a candidate at the next primaries and that he will have no opposition in his own

An interesting sketch of the life of the newly appointed judge follows:

E. Stanley Toadvin was born December 3, 1848, in this city, in ent Peninsula Hotel now stands, fire of 1860. He is the surviving son of the late Purnell Toadvine and the City for the past several years, Amanda Parsons Toadvine. Mr. Toadvin received his early education at the old Salisbury Academy and afterwards entered Prince ton University in 1865, graduating in 1869 with the degrees of A. B. and A. M. He then went to the University of Virginia for two years taking a special course in State and International Law, Literature and Hiscame to Salisbury and studied law

The principal business of the Somer set Circuit Court last week consisted of two homicide cases. The first was that of Enoch Burkett, colored, indicted for the killing of William Fulford, also colored, at Crisfield last December. The case was tried before a jury and a verdict of murder in the second degree was rendered. Burkett was sentenced to 15 years in the penitentiary.

The second case was that of Will Whitelock, colored, who was indicted for the killing of Raymond Blake, also colored, in a fracas over a crap game in Ruch's wood, near Princess Anne, last November. The accused was found guilty of amanslaughter and sentenced to 8 years in the peniteutiary. In connection with this case Chas. Taylor, colored, was also indicted for aiding the murder of Blake and also carrying concealed weapons, but he had disappeared and his whereabouts have not yet been discovered.

UNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

ly For Tomorrow, "Two bridenis," Abiy Discu By A Local Writer.

Under the topical plan of matthews ritings, we again have the scene of our lesson in Gallilee, probably at capernaum; a field of grain and a synague is the scene of action. Both incidents scables Doan's Ointment. They assume the position of fault-finding even upon the Sabbath, which to them was not Sabbath desecration. Our lesson is, in fact, a lesson on Sabbath observance. The disciples, possibly upon their way to the synagogue or church upon Sabbath, passing through a field and being hungry, plucked grain (wheat or barley) and, rubbing it in their hands to free it of chaff, ate the grains. This plucking of the grain by hand was permissible under the law, hence the act of taking what was another's was not charge-able, but, being the Sabbath, the a single dose of Doan's Regulets is act of gathering a few handfuls for the enough. Treatment cures habitual satisfying of hunger was deemed labor, and a sesedration of the Holy Sabbath. These people knew the fourth commandment; no one knew it better. It was their law, and had no doubt been discussed and rediscussed in the synagogue, and they had learned to apply it literally. The letter of the law accuses or excuses according to the con-

The Strange Case of a New Love

An Unselfish Woman and the Sacrifice Site Made. By CUTHBERT BAKER Copyright, 1916, by American Pres Association,

ence was twenty-one and Edns nine-teen. Ten years later the husband was obliged to make a business trip to Russia. His wife being in delicate health at the time, it was not deemed best that she should accompany him. From Russia Clarence wrote often to his wife, at times mentioning in glowing terms a certain prima donna, Veitvolsky, a Russian Pole. He was not aware that there was anything said in these letters to lead his wife to be-lieve that his feeling for the singer was anything more than friendship. She did not write him that she was lealous of his new found friend. In-deed, she never mentioned the singer from his wife's bosom friend. Sarah Ingalls, that Mrs. Hooper had been caught in one of those terrible railroad accidents which kill and main so many people and had been crushed to death. He had seen an account of the acci-dent the day before cabled to an English paper, but did not dream of his wife having been on the train.

A death of one very dear to us in the events of which we do not par-ticipate personally is very different from one where we are present. Clarence Hooper could not realize that his wife was dead. It was only when he returned to his desolate home that his bereavement appeared to him as a reality, and then it rushed upon him with its full force. No children had come to them to impart life or cheerfulness to the companionless man. Nevertheless he remained in the home where he had been so happy, morbidly dwelling upon his loss. The lady from whom he had received the cablegram announcing his wife's death had gone abroad, crossing him on the ocean. She had, however, left a letter for him giving all she knew of the circumstances attending his wife's death. It was not much, since no one living had seen her killed and the body was un-recognizable, but stated that she had buried the remains in his lot at the cemetery. He would find the grave near the center of the lot

Hooper's first act after his return was to visit his wife's grave and shed bitter tears there. The remainder of his life seemed a dreary waste before him. He had had his one love, it had passed from him, and he would never have another. A few days after this he opened his wife's will. He was surprised to notice a codicil added during his absence abroad leaving the in come of certain property to Sarah ingalls, who had been his informant as to the testator's death. The reason Hooper was surprised at this bequest was because Sarah Ingalis was wealthy. Moreover, this legacy halved his own income from his wife's prop-

It was winter when all this occurred. and as soon as spring opened Hooper went to the cemetery for the purpose of putting plants about his wife's grave. What was his astonishment to discover that the adornment he had intended was there already. It consisted of rosebushes of a variety that his wife had loved and had kept in their conservatory during the winter

Standing there beside the grave of the woman he had loved so well a tumult of suspicions, conjectures poured in upon him. The events of his married life passed before him in review as they are said to pass instantaneously before one who is drowning. He had known his wife since they were children, and this sweep of memory went so far back as their first love, and he wondered if any one then had been his rival Next he considered those she had known when they were young men and women. From there he passed to those who might have come between them since they had been married. Among all these he could not remember a single person who could have filled the place he had for years considered he alone could fill.

Hooper was stirred by deep emotion. His wife had been an orphan with no brothers or sisters-indeed, no relatives in whom she had taken an interest or who had taken any interest in her. Sarah Ingalis had been the only being except himself that she had loved and by whom she had been loved. Yet here was some one who had forestalled him in caring for her grave. Was this unknown person man or woman? If a man, had he loved her before or after her marriage? Had that love been returned? This last thought maddened

He turned away with a groan expressive partly of grief, partly of anger. Why had Edna never spoken of this person? A woman she would certainly have mentioned, a man she might have mentioned, a lover she would not likely have mentioned, and would never have made known.

Such was the reasoning by which Clarence Hooper persuaded himself that his dead wife had loved some man and, loving that man, she could never have loved her husband. Doubtless some obstacle had intervened between them to prevent a marriage, or, what was worse, she had met the unknown after she had become a wife. Hooper inflicted upon himself a succession of such torturing hypotheses and when they had been all applied began again and went through the process arew.

One day Hooper saw in a paper that Veltvolsky was coming to America to sing in opera. The thought that he might meet her again was pleasant to him. When she arrived he went to the metropolis where she was singing and called upon her. He told her of his bereavement, and she sympathized with him. With kindly tact she diverted his mind. When she had time to spare from study and rehearsals they drove out together. Hooper was a frequent attendant at the opera-house where Veltvolsky sang, and evenings when she didn't sing he fre-quented her apartments. He confided to her his discovery that some one who had loved his wife was caring for her grave. The prima donna deprecated his fears that his wife had had a lover, explaining the episode by the supposition that the unknown friend was some poor creature whom the dead had befriended. This temporarily at least relieved his mind.

Hooper was seen so much at the opera, applicated so enthusiastically. drove so often with Veltvolsky and spent so much time in her apartments that the little coterie of singers at last began to connect her name with his in more tender connection than friendship. Then one day he saw a potice in a newspaper that the prima donna was to marry an American gentleman whom she had met in Russia shortly before her visit to the United States.

Hooper was naturally very angry at the publication of this bit of information, which had not been authorized. He went to the office of the paper con-taining it and complained. He was shown the manuscript of the item. which had come in from an unknown person. He did not recognize the name signed to it as belonging to any one he knew. Nevertheless there was something about the handwriting. which was evidently a woman's, that was familiar to him. It looked like an unsuccessful attempt at disguise. He could not divest himself of the feeling that he had known the writer or had at least seen her handwriting.

When the opera season came to a close Hooper went to his home. The first thing he did after his return was to visit his wife's grave. He did so with mingled emotions, among which was a desire to see if there was any further evidence of the unknown friend or lover.

He found the grave strewn with fresh cut flowers. A cry escaped him, Had the grave been desecrated he ould have been enraged. Thu of an unknown affection filled him with agony.

The mystery, with its distressing attendant conditions, began to wear so upon the widower that he feared they might unbalance his brain. Could be have found a clew to work on his in yestigations would have been a relief As it was he could only brood.

One day he formed a resolution to bury it all in a new interest. Mme. Veltsvoisky had shown great partiality to him, but that she would marry him he did not know. She had gone to the country, and there he followed her. He told her that through her and soon after passed through the place where Hooper lived, and he ind persuaded her to stop over for a day that he might show her the home in which it was expected she would in future live. After inspecting it she expressed a desire to visit his dead wife's grave. When he asked her why she could not tell him.

It was a bright morning in early approach when they draws to the ceme-summer when they drove to the co tery. As they walked minus on the avenues leading to the lot B er's quick eye discerned a figure tri ming a rosebush that hung over t grave of his wife. His heart throbb with a sudden relief when he saw it was a woman. They were about entering the gate when the figure turned. Hooper staggered and caught at the iron fence.

He saw his wife in the flesh.
"Clarence," she said, "I lie in that grave. By your letters I knew that your heart had been given to another. I took advantage of the disaster that occurred at the time to die to you Sarab Ingalla helped me, and I went sarsh ingalis helped me, and I went to Europe with her before you returned. I did this to give you every opportunity to wis your new love, she whom I see with you. I have devoted myself to bringing you together. It is the desires to, secure for Salisbury a free and unhampered city government that these candidates have allowed their names to come before the people. The offices to which they aspire are not remunerative places and it is only because they have at heart the better interests of the tax-payers generally that they have been induced to accept the nominations.

CHARACTER IN A REPUBLIC.

Roosevelt Tells the Why We Succeed.

VIEWS ON SOCIALISM

Asks For Large Families In ress in Paris—Talks of Man's Chief Duty, Danger of Class Hatred and Appeals For Patriotic Spirit. No Room For Slighters.

Paris, April 23.—Colonel Theodore Bossevelt delivered the following adon "Citizenship In a Republic" at

Strange and impressive associations rise in the mind of a man from the world who speaks before this august body in this ancient institution of learning. Before his eyes pass the lows of mighty kings and warlike nobles, of great masters of law and theology. Through the shining dust of the dead centuries he sees crowded figures that tell of the power and learning and splendor of times gone by, and he sees also the innumerable nost of humble students to whom lerkship meant emancipation, to whom it was well nigh the only outlet from the dark thraidom of the middle

Today I shall speak to you on the subject of individual citizenship, the subject of vital importance to you, my hearers, and to me and my cour trymen, because you and we are citicratic republic such as each of ours—an effort to realize in its full government by, of and for the e-represents the most gigantic of all possible social experiments, the one fraught with greatest possibilities e for good and for evil.

The success of republics like yours and like ours means the glory and our fallure the despair of mankind, and for you and for us the question of the quality of the individual citizen is su-

To Succeed Be Good. With you here and with us in my own home, in the long run, success or failure will be conditioned upon the way in which the average man, the average woman, does his or her duty, arms in the ordinary, everyday affairs of life and next in those great occasional crises which call for the heroic virtues. The average citizen must be good citizen if our republics are to

Les the man of learning, the man of lettered leisure, beware of that queer and cheap temptation to pose to him-self and to others as the cynic, as the man who has outgrown emotions and beliefs, the man to whom good and will are as one. The poorest way to face it is to face it with a sneer.

There is no more unhealthy being, no than less worthy of respect, than he who either really holds or feigns to hold an attitude of sneering disbellef toward all that is great and lofty, whether in achievement or in that no-ble effort which even if it full, comes scool to achievement. Shame on the man of cultivated taste who permits refinement to develop into a fastidiousness that units him for doing the rough work of a workaday world. Among the free peoples who govern themselves there is but a small field of usefulness open for the men of cloistered life who shrink from contact with their fellows.

No Room For Slighters.

shill less room is there for those who decide or slight what is done by those who actually bear the brunt of the day nor yet for those others who always profess that they would like to take action if only the conditions of life were not what they actually are. The man who does nothing cuts the same sordid figure in the pages of history, whether he be cynic or fop or voluptuary.

It is war worn Hotspur, spent with hard fighting, he of the many errors and the valiant end, over whose memory we love to linger, not over the memory of the young lord who "but for the vile guns would have been a

The good man should be both s strong and a brave man-that is, he should be able to fight, he should be able to serve his country as a soldier if the need arises. There are well meaning philosophers who declaim against the unrighteousness of war. They are right only if they lay all their emphasis upon the unrighteous-War is a dreadful thing, and unjust war is a crime against humanity. But it is such a crime because it is unjust, not because it is war. The choice must ever be in favor of righteousness, and this whether the alternative be peace or whether the alternative be war. The question must not be merely. Is there to be peace or war? The question must be, Is the right to prevail?

Are the great laws of righteouspess once more to be fulfilled? And the auswer from a strong and virile people must be "Yes," whatever the cost.

Every honorable effort should always be made to avoid war, just as every honorable effort should always be made by the individual in private life to keep out of a brawl, to keep out of trouble, but no self respecting individual, so self respecting aution, can-or aught to submit to wrong ability to fight at need, is it to mber that the chief of blessings by nation is that it shall leave its to ny nation is that it shall be greatest se of to inherit the land. The greatest se of sterility. and the severest of all condemnations should be that visited upon willful sterility.

The first essential in any civilization is that the man and the woman shall be father and mother of healthy children, so that the race shall increase and not decrease. If this is not so, if through no fault of the society there is failure to increase, it is a great misfortune. If the failure is due to de-liberate and willful fault, then it is not merely a misfortune; it is one of those crimes of ease and self indulgence, of shrinking from pain and effort and risk, which in the long run nature punishes more beavily than any

If we of the great republics, if we. the free people who claim to have emancipated ourselves from the thraidom of wrong and error, bring down on our heads the curse that comes upon the willfully barren, then it will be an idle waste of breath to prattle of our achievements, to boast of all that we have done.

No refluement of life, no delicacy of taste, no material progress, no sordid heaping up of riches, no sensuous de-velopment of art and literature, can in any way compensate for the loss of the great fundamental virtues, and of these great fundamental virtues the greatest is the race's power to perpetuate the race.

Man's Chief Duty.

Character must show itself in the man's performance both of the duty he owes himself and of the duty he owes the state. The man's foremost duty is owed to himself and his family, and he can do this duty only by earning money, by providing what is essential to material well being. It is only after this has been done that he can hope to build a higher superstructure on the solid material foundation. It is only after this has been done that he can help in movements for the general well being.

It is not good to excite that bitter laughter which expresses contempt, and contempt is what we feel for the being whose enthusiasm to benefit mankind is such that he is a burden to those nearest him, who wishes to do great things for humanity in the abstract, but who cannot keep his wife in comfort or educate his chil-

I decline to recognize the mere multimilitonaire, the man of mere wealth. as an asset of value to any country. and especially as not an asset to my own country. If he has earned or uses his wealth in a way that makes him of real benefit, of real use—and such is often the case-why, then he does become an asset of worth. But it is the way in which it has been earned or used and not the mere fact of wealth that entitles him to the credit,

There is need in business, as in most other forms of human activity, of the great guiding intelligences. Their places cannot be supplied by any number of lesser intelligences.

It is a bad thing for a nation to raise and to admire a false standard of success, and there can be no falser standard than that set by the delication of material well being in and for itself. The power of the journalist is great, but he is entitled neither to respect nor admiration because of that power unless it is used aright. He can do, and he often does, great good. He can do, and he often does, infinite mischief. All journalists, all writers, for the very reason that they appreciate the vast possibilities of their profession, should bear testimony against those who deeply discredit it. Offenses against taste and morals, which are bad enough in a private citizen. are infinitely worse if made into instruments for debauching the community through a newspaper.

Mendacity, slander, sensationalism. inanity, vapid triviality, all are potent factors for the debauchery of the public mind and conscience. The excuse advanced for vicious writing, that the public demands it and that the demand must be supplied, can no more be admitted than if it were advanced by the purveyors of food who sell poisonous adulterations.

Virtues of the Household. The homely virtues of the household, the ordinary worksday virtues which make the woman a good housewife and house mother, which make the man a hard worker, a good husband and father, a good soldler at need. stand at the bottom of character. But of course many others must be added thereto if'a state is to be not only free.

but great. Good citizenship is not good citizenship if exhibited only in the home. There remain the duties of the individual in relation to the state, and these duties are none too easy under the conditions which exist where the effort is made to carry on free government in a complex industrial civiliza-

Perhaps the most important thing the ordinary citizen, and, above all, the leader of ordinary citizens, has to remember in political life is that be must not be a sheer doctrinaire.

Woe to the empty phrase maker, to the empty idealist, who, instead of making ready the ground for the man of action, turns against him when he appears and hampers him as he does the work!

Moreover, the preacher of ideals must remember how sorry and contemptible is the figure which he will cut, how great the damage that he will do, if he does not himself in his teaching and uplifting of mankind.

the ideals that he preaches for others.

Let him remember also that the worth of the ideal must be largely determined by the success with which it can in practice be realized. We should abhor the so called "practical" men whose practically assumes the shape of that peculiar baseness which finds its expression in disbeller in morality and decency, in disregard of high standards of living and conduct. Such a creature is the worst enemy of the a creature is the worst enemy of the body politic. But only less desirable as a citizen is his nominal opponent and real ally, the man of fantastic vision who makes the impossible bet-ter forever the enemy of the possible

The Slave of Names Much of the discussion about social ism and individualism is entirely pointless because of failure to agree on terminology. It is not good to be the slave of names. I am a strong individualist by personal habit, inheritance and conviction, but it is a mere matter of common sense to recognize that the state, the community, the citizens acting together, can do a number of things better than if they were left to individual action.

The individualism which finds its expression in the abuse of physical force is checked very early in the growth of civilization, and we of today should in our turn strive to shackle or destroy that individualism which triumphs by greed and cunning, which exploits the weak by craft instead of ruling them by brutality.

We ought to go with any man in the effort to bring about justice and the equality of opportunity, to turn the tool user more and more into the tool owner, to shift burdens so that they can be more equitably borne.

The deadening effect on any race of the adoption of a logical and extreme socialistic system could not be overstated. It would spell sheer destruction. It would produce grosser wrong and outrage, fouler immorality, than any existing system. But this does not mean that we may not with great advantage adopt certain of the principles professed by some given set of men who bappen to call themselves Social-

We are bound in honor to refuse to listen to those men who would make us desist from the effort to do away with the inequality which means infustice, the inequality of right, of opportunity, of privilege. We are bound in honor to strive to bring ever nearer the day when as far as is humanly possible we shall be able to realize the ideal that each man shall have an equal opportunity to show the stuff that is in him by the way in which he renders service.

There are plenty of men calling themselves Socialists with whom up to a certain point it is quite possible to work. If the next step is one which both we and they wish to take, why, of course, take it without any regard to the fact that our views as to the tenth step may differ. But, on the other hand, keep clearly in mind that, though it has been worth while to take one step, this does not in the least mean that it may not be highly disadvantageous to take the next.

It is just as foolish to refuse all progress because people demanding it desire at some points to go to absurd extremes as it would be to go to these absurd extremes simply because some of the measures advocated by the extremists were wise.

Persecution is bad because it is persecution and without reference to which side happens at the moment to be the persecutor and which the perse-

In a republic to be successful we must learn to combine intensity of conviction with a broad tolerance of difference of conviction. Wide differences of opinion in matters of religious, political and social belief must exist if conscience and intellect alike are not to be stunted, if there is to be room for healthy growth.

Bitter internecine hatreds, based on such differences, are signs not of earnestness of belief, but of that fanaticism which, whether religious or antireligious, democratic or anti-democratic, is itself but a manifestation of the gloomy bigotry which has been the chief factor in the downfall of so

I believe that a man must be a good patriot before he can be, and as the only possible way of being, a good cit-izen of the world. Experience teaches us that the average man who protests that his international feeling swamps his national feeling, that he does not care for his country because he cares tice proves himself the foe of man-kind; that the man who says that he does not care to be a citizen of any one country because he is a citizen of one country because he is a citizen of the world is in very fact usually an exceedingly undesirable citizen of whatever corner of the world he hap-

Mississippi river.

"Back in the old days," mused Joseph T. Goodman, the pioneer editor of the west, who gave to Mr. Clemens his first job as a writer, "Sam was the best company, the drollest entertainer. and the most interesting fellow imaginable. His humor was always creeping out and stayed with him to the

"A few weeks ago I received a letter from him couched in characteristic terms. He wrote, 'Come on and visit me once more before we get so old we can't hear each other swear.

"It was my privilege to read many of his works in manuscript before they were sent to the publishers. I recollect his giving me the manuscript of 'Roughing It' to read one afternoon when I was visiting him in the early seventies. He made a great hit with 'Innocents Abroad,' and he was afraid he would not sustain his newly acquired reputation. When I began to read Sam sat down at his deak and wrote nervously.

"For an hour I read along intently, hardly noticing that Sam was beginning to fret and shift about uneasily. At last he could not stand it any longer, and, jumping up, he exclaimed: D- you, you have been reading that stuff an hour and you haven't cracked a smile yet. I don't believe I'm keep-ing up my lick."

His Riest Newspaper Work. "Mark Twain lacked only seven months and nine days of fourscore years of age." said Judge C. C. Good-win, a veteran editor of Sait Lake City, in commenting on the death of the humorist. Judge Goodwin was one of the brilliant company who gathered at the Comstock lode in the old days. "I know he said that he was only seventy-four," continued the judge,

"but when we were in Virginia City, Nev., Mark was older than I was, and I am seventy-eight. Here is the record of it." He opened a book of biographies by Amelia J. Carver, published in 1889. There it was: "Samuel L.

Clemens, born Nov. 80, 1830." "I did not go on the Virginia City Enterprise until Clemens left it." said Judge Goodwin, "but I never ceased to hear from him. He first wrote a burlesque Fourth of July oration, which was published in an Aurora (Nev.) paper. As I remember it, it be-

"I was sired by the great American eagle and borne by a Continental dam. This pleased Joseph T. Goodman, editor of the Virginia City Enterprise. He wrote to Clemens, telling him that if he were not making more than the Enterprise was paying he would be welcomed to the staff of the paper. One day a man came into the editorial sanctum. He wore a dilapidated hat, jeans, a hickory shirt and carried a roll of blankets. That was Mark Twain's entrance into literature. Except for his experience on the Enterprise it is doubtful if he would ever have been known as a genius."

A Child's Tribute. Dan Beard, the artist and naturalist, who lives only a half mile from Storm-field, Mark Twain's home at Redding, Conn., where he died, told a recent experience the humorist had confided to him. He was walking up Fifth avenue, in New York, when a little girl about ten years old slipped her hand in his and started to match his stride. "I'm awful glad to see you," she

"Are you?" said he. "That's very nice."

"Yes," she answered. "I knew you right away." They continued to the next corner chatting, he proud that he could be so well known that a little girl like this could pick him out. Suddenly a horrible thought struck him, and he stopped. "Who am I?" he asked, turning around. "Why," answered his companion. "Buffalo Bill, of sively at a large, black cigar passed slowly along Wall street in New York one day several years ago. Everything about him marked him as one who did not belong to any branch of the family of clerks, office boys, brokers and financiers who hurried past him. As he came in front of the subtreasury building he stopped and gazed silently at the big bronze statue of Washington on the treasury steps. "George," he drawled, slowly taking off his black slouch hat, "George. times have changed since you were

Old Comirades Relate Stories

About Humorist's Early Days.

HIS WIT KEEN TO THE LAST.

This sort of thing happened over and over again. Twain was forever thinking up new schemes for investing his earnings, schemes which fell through when the humorist brought them to Wall street. Once he came to the office of a banker with a bundle of excelsior under his arm and a spiral hatpin in his pocket and, finding that the banker was in Europe, spent the effect of a banker was in Europe, spent the either morning demonstrating to the office force the advantage of the spiral pin over other kinds.

San Francisco's old timers and others have been recalling the days, fifty years ago, when the late Samuel L. Clemens, the great humorist, was plain Sam Clemens and the name Mark Twain had little significance for anybody except steamboat men on the Mississippi river.

"Buck in the old days," mused Joseph T. Goodman, the ploneer editor of this day is not aure whather Twain the late of the came to be in death carnest. He thought that pin would be a great thing if it could be placed on the market. The manager of the office, who to this day is not aure whather Twain

ket. The manager of the office, who to this day is not sure whether Twain was joking or not, believes that he wanted the banking house to float bonds on the strength of the spiral hatpin, Wall street, in fact, under-stood Mark Twain about as well as he understood Wall street.

A Joke at His Expense. Probably the best joke that ever happened at Mark Twain's expense occured a few years ago when he passed through Monroe county, Mo., on his way from Hannibal to Columbia. He was on a Missouri, Kansas and Texas local passenger train, and the trip across the country was a triumph, hundreds of people gathering at the different stations to see and shake hands with him. At Paris there were 2,000.

A week prior there had occurred at Paris, Mo., the county seat, the only lynching in the history of the county. A man named Witherup had killed a boy named Grow, cut his body up, placed it in a sack and hauled it to the river three miles distant. The friends of the boy's family organized a mob, which the citizens and the officers alike considered a joke, and after watching it parley around until midnight without doing anything all the spectators save the more curious and a few small boys, street gamins, went to bed. At I o'clock the mob over-powered the sheriff and broke into the jail. The prisoner was dragged from his cell, and as the tall and gaunt form was passed by strong arms out into the moonlight the boys who were perched on top of a coal shed near the jail door cried out: "Here he comes!

Here he comes!" outskirts of the crowd with the shout: "Get a rope! Get a rope!" And the murderer was finally taken to a bridge near town and banged.

When Mark's train slipped into Paris some of these same gamins were perched on box cars on the side track. The crowd thought the distinguished vistor would appear on the steps between the chair car and the smoker and surged that way. He did not appear, however, and disappointment was keen until some one at the rear of the train caught sight of him coming out and shouted: "Here he comes! Here he comes!" Immediately above the confusion and noise arose the shout of one of the gamins: "Get a rope! Get a rope!"

His Serious Jests.

Spontaneity, playful extravagance, the ignoring of the conventional and the staid, even at the risk of shocking limited and literal beings, were characteristics of Mark Twain. His scrawl on a card to a sick man on whom he called, "God and I are sorry that you are so ill," was an expression that came to him without the slightest hesitancy over its incongruity.

His calm remark that he thought that the report was somewhat exaggerated when it was bruited that be was dead is on a par with his philosophical outlook on the game of des-

"I hear," he wrote to the press last Christmas eve, "that the newspapers say I am dying. I would not do such a thing at my time of life. I am behaving as well as I can, Merry Christmas to everybody!"

One of the last of those beautiful and reverent thoughts which Mr. Clemens so often uttered was spoken only a few days before his last departure for Bermuda. He and Mr. Frederick A. Duneka were playing billiards late in the night in one of the great rooms in Stormfield.

"The shades were drawn aside," said Mr. Duneka, "and from the windows we could look out into the clear night. I remarked that the moonlight was heaveniy.

"'One of my ideas of heaven, said Mr. Clemens slowly, 'is a place full of friends.
